The grownups have no monopoly of active frocks this season. Clother children, big and little, and for those is in their teens who already resent ing ranked with children, though their débutante days still lie years ahead of n, are more than usually charming this winter. Many of the ideas modish for the elders fit into childish requirets very effectively, and the beauty of the materials and colorings benefits the maker of children's clothes, although of many of the loveliest stuffs are totally inappropriate for child use.

American children are, on the whole,
well dressed nowadays. There was a than English children and in better taste than the children of the French, who, despite their traditional instinct for tasteful dress, seldom succeed in dressing their children childishly on festive occasions.

One hardly knows where to begin in discussion of clothes for the juniors. For the very small girls white is the acepted thing, and perhaps there is no great variety and novelty within the neces sarily circumscribed limitations, but as soon as the little lady graduates into colors her wardrobe begins to offer more variety if not greater daintiness.

There are mothers who dress their daughters entirely in white even through these years—white pique, white lines, white wool, white lawn, batiste and mulland the fad is a pretty one, but impractical for any one whose purse is not well filled. The supply in such a case must be enormous, since white that is not immaculate is distressing, and the normal child is not likely to keep her white frock immaculate very long at a time, so the changes must be frequent.

buttonholing in dark brown. Brown is, by the way, more popular in children's clothing this winter than it has been in many years, and one sees many small girls on the street in coats and mushroom shaped beaver or felt hats of warm brown, the rather dark though not sombre shades with a dash of yellow in them being especially liked. There are some extremely pretty little dresses in brown among the wool models shown by exclusive outfitters for children, and if the shade chosen has warmth and brightness as well as softness the color seems quite as childish as the more familiar blues.

Two of the dresses pictured here were in brown, one of soft cashmere, the other of cloth, and both were in the same medium tobacco shade. The cashmere jumper was made up on the lines familiar in linen, with scalloped edges embroid-ered in a very light brown that was almost an eoru, though it had a warmer tinge, and the belt was in this same light brown. The other model had a heavily. embroidered collar and a sash girdle for its only trimming notes.

In the soft dull blues and the rose shades there are delightful wool frocks. often trimmed with black and whitepipings or buttonhole loops or buttons of black taffeta or satin, and folds, collars, chemisettes, &c., of white piqué. All white wool in fine serge, broadcloth or cashmere, preferably the eerge, is a favorite with the designers, and here again we find pipings, buttons and simulated buttonholes of satin, an echo from tne trimming fads of the older folk.

the cotton and linen materials with warm these coats now are of somewhat plain character, the quality of the material and possibly the touch of fur in the trimming providing elegance rather than any excessive elaboration.

In party frocks for the little girls the sheer lingerie stuffs hold undisputed sway, and one finds the tendencies of the modes for grown folk reflected in modified form among the frocks for wee folk. A short Empire waist line makes its appearance in some of the very prettiest little frocks, sometimes indicated merely by a sash loosely confining a straight one piece frock at this short line or introduced nore definitely in a waist and skirt arrangement, as in one of the models illustrated here in which the sash of liberty runs around the short waist under straps of insertion, suggesting wide beading.

The straight loose model with its long tucked sleeves is much more attractive in the frock than in the sketch because of the exquisite fineness of materials and details, lines of exquisitely dainty hand embroidery running from throat to hem between lines of valenciennes insertion.

The long close sleeves appear in many of the most exquisite models, but are singularly unchildish, and though grownups have perforce accepted them it is surely not necessary for the small children to put up with them.

The short waisted line with scarf girdle is used for some very pretty and childish wool frocks as well as for lingerie models, the frock of light blue broadcloth pictured here being a particularly successful nstance of this arrangement.

The long French waist, though not in ts exaggerated form, is still much used, and the natural waist line is in evidence in many models, so there is variety from which to choose and the child's figure modish for the schoolgirl's hard wear, and may be considered.

horizon widens, for here many materials down collar of rather heavy soft lines, are in order which would be out of place hand embroidered, with cuffs to match, for the little girl. As the little frocks must is used with many of the simple wool first of all look childish, so these other frocks. The collar leaves the throat frocks must first of all look girlish; and bare and is as generally becoming in if girls all had the good sense to appreciate this fact or all had mothers with taste and wisdom enough to understand this law and enforce it we should be spared some lamentable sights.

Unfortunately one cannot say of these older girls, as of the American children, more youthful than the high collared that they are on the whole well and appropriately dressed nowadays, and the aping of grownups' fashions, the adopion of exaggerated fads and follies in clothes which one sees among young girls leads one to wonder what the mothers can have in their heads to replace the space normally occupied by good sense.

And yet one does see a host of charmingly dressed schoolgirls, and the shops and work rooms are full of pretty frocks for them. The simple Directoire frocks shorn of their extravagances present excellent possibilities for the slim, undeveloped girlish figure, and pretty street models in soft wool with simple trimming, straight skirts, short waists and sash girdles are numerous among the models shown by makers who specialise in cloth

Short waisted evening frocks too are liked, the one pictured in the central underwear beneath are quite warm enough group giving a good idea of the charming for children and have the advantage of girlish possibilities along this line. Sheer aundering, so that they may be kept materials, lingerie, silk mousseline, chitfresh. For the street heavy, warm coats fon, or net are the correct thing for the solve-the problem, and after baby days girlish evening gown, though India silk and crèpe de chine are admissible. Heavier silks are not in as good taste, and though soft satin finished silks are used even for girls no older than 15 the fastidious will have none of them. Thin, fine laces, ribbon, tiny artificial roses, hand embroidery in silks or sout evening frock, and even very bold of heavy embroidery effects are taboo, India silk, messaline or soft satin may be used for slips, the outer frock being often unattached to the lining, though this is not always the case.

Remarkably dainty and girlish evening frocks are made up of fine white net, the Brussels mesh being a favorite and trimmed with hand embroidery in white soutache. The amount of soutaching will be determined by the taste and purse of the purchaser, but a very little of such trimming supplemented by fine tucks will give a charming finish to a frock.

High neck or demi-décolletage is correct for the young girl's evening toilette, the latter being chiefly of the Dutch neck variety. The soft sash girdle, tied at the side as often as in the back. is universally used.

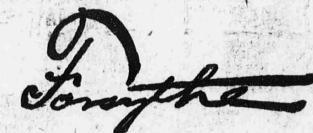

For house and street wear under separate coats are the little Directoire frocks in wool of which we have already spoken, and many others simple of line but having no Directoire features. The black and white check model of the sketch is an instance of such a design, and various models slightly differing from this one but of similar character are shown in cashmere, serge, broadcloth and wool mixtures.

Long sleeves have made their appearance among the schoolgirl's frocks, but there is still a preference for the three-quarter sleeve, though the elbow sleeve has practically disappeared, save for evening wear.
